Subordinating conjunctions are integral to this process, bridging the gap between an independent clause, which can stand alone as a sentence, and a dependent clause, which cannot. Understanding subordinating conjunctions is essential for us to master the art of writing and speaking because they help us indicate relationships such as time, cause and effect, condition, and concession.Definition and RoleSubordinating conjunctionsserve a crucial function in sentence structure by connecting a dependent clause to an independent clause. The main role of these conjunctions is to show the relationship between the two clauses in terms of time, cause and effect, contrast, or condition.Cause and effect: because, since, so thatTime: after, before, once, untilContrast: although, even though, whereasCondition: if, unless, provided thatThese words signal that the following clause complements the main one, adding necessary detail or context.Formation and StructureTo properly use subordinating conjunctions, we need to understand how they impact the structure of our sentences. Here a straightforward way to see how they fit:Independent Clause: Can stand alone as a sentence.Dependent Clause: Cannot stand alone. Needs the independent clause to make sense.Subordinating Conjunction: Introduces the dependent clause and shows its relationship to the independent clause.Here is an example for clarity:Independent Clause: She finished her report.Subordinating Conjunction: beforeDependent Clause: She finished her report beforetheforthe deadline was due.The Importance of Subordinating ConjunctionsCoherence in WritingWe use subordinating conjunctions to link independent clauses to dependent clauses, which is essential for creating coherent paragraphs. For instance:Time:We waited until the sun set.Condition:If you hurry, you can catch the bus.Clarity of IdeasBy using subordinating conjunctions, we clarify the relationship between different parts of a sentence. Consider the following examples:Cause and Effect:Because it was raining, the picnic was canceled.Contrast:Even though it was cold, we decided to go for a walk. Subordinating conjunctions are the connectors that link a dependent
conjunctions are the prerequisites for an action or state to occur. These conjunctions include:if: We can go to the park if it doesnt rain.unless: Ill attend the wedding unless I have to work.provided that: You may use my car provided that you fill up the tank.as long as: I will support you as long as you try your best.Cause and EffectTo express causality, we use subordinating conjunctions that connect reasons to outcomes. This linkage is critical for understanding the motivation behind actions. Notable conjunctions are:because: We stayed indoors because it was thundering.since: Since you asked nicely, you may have a cookie.so that: We set an alarm so that we wouldnt oversleep.Contrast and ConcessionConjunctions of contrast and concession show an unexpected relationship or contradiction between clauses. These are powerful tools for conveying surprise or exceptions, such as:although: Although it was raining, we had a great picnic.even though: We went hiking even though it was chilly.despite: Despite having a headache, she finished the marathon.whereas: You like to ski, whereas I prefer snowboarding.List of Subordinating ConjunctionsLearn 50 subordinating conjunctions list in English grammar.alertalthoughseas fast long asas much as soon asas thoughbecausebeforeeven thoughfirst onlyif whenever thoninasmuchin order that sinceinsofar asinsofarinsofar asinsofar as long asinsofar as long as thisinsofar as thisinsofar as thisinsofar
