Continue

If you have an Android phone or tablet, you unfortunately (or fortunately, depending on your point of view) do not have access to something like the stock "Podcasts" app that comes packaged with new Apple devices. Don't let that discourage you though, as you still have access to plenty of options thanks to the amazing selection of apps available on the Google Play Store. Let's take a look at a few of the best options below. 1. Doggcatcher One of the original podcast apps on Android, Doggcatcher has built up quite a following over the years. While its interface is perhaps a bit behind the times compared to its current competition, it remains a feature-packed app, with the ability to customize playback speed and auto download/delete episodes of your favorite podcasts. If you happen to own a Chromecast stick, this app will work with it, meaning you will be able to stream your favorite podcast to your TV/entertainment system. It costs $2.99, which, while expensive for an app, is pretty cheap in the grand scheme of things. → Scroll down to continue reading article ↵ 2. Beyondpod Beyondpod x 3. Doggcatcher One of the original podcast apps on Android, Doggcatcher has built up quite a following over the years. If you happen to own a Chromecast stick, this app will work with it, meaning you will be able to stream your favorite podcast to your TV/entertainment system. It costs $2.99, which, while expensive for an app, is pretty cheap in the grand scheme of things. → Scroll down to continue reading article ↵ 4. Player FM The standout feature of Player FM is probably its logo, as it adheres to all of Google's new design motifs. Like the other apps here, Player FM supports auto-download of all of the basic features you'd expect from a podcast app, like speed control, offline playback. Best of all, Player FM is entirely free, at least to a point. You can subscribe to up to twenty shows on the house. There's a "Gold" version of the app that will be released in the future, and it will allow for unlimited feed/subscription. → Scroll down to continue reading article ↵ 5. Pocket Casts Winner of the Google Play Editor's Choice award for March 2014, Pocket Casts is an essential app for most Android users. It supports Chromecast, variable speed playback, tablet support, and sharing with your friends. Unlike some other podcast apps, Pocket Casts gives you a bit more control. This comes mostly in the form of its associated widget, which lets you manage basic functions of the app from your homescreen. Additionally, Pocket Casts is available on iOS devices as well, meaning you can sync your podcasts on your Android phone with your iPad, or on your Android tablet with your iPhone. Like some cloud music apps (e.g. Amazon Prime Music, Spotify, and Beats Music), Pocket Casts comes equipped with discovery features that allow you to easily search for podcasts you might be interested in. → Scroll down to continue reading article ↵ 6. Socrata All in all, you really cannot go wrong with any of these apps. There are plenty of options to choose from, and at a certain point, it really becomes all about user preference. I would suggest trying the free options (or Beyondpod's trial), and see if you like those first. If they do not suit your needs, then go after the paid options. Either way, with so many quality podcast apps out there, you are bound to find the right one for you sooner rather than later. → Scroll down to continue reading article ↵ 7. History Chick If you find history a little dry, check out The History Chick. This bi-weekly podcast sees hosts Beckett Graham and Susan Vollenweider introduce a different female character from history — factual or fictional — each episode, from Lizzie Borden to Mary Wollstonecraft and Marie Antoinette. Each hour-long episode takes a deep dive into the story of these characters, introducing you to little-known facts and quirky tidbits of information you won't hear anywhere else. Ridiculous History History isn't always serious — it can be fascinating, at times brutal, and often, downright weird. That's where Ridiculous History comes in. Hosts Ben Bowlin and Noel Frey take you behind the scenes of history's weirdest, most wonderful stories, from how to create a Hand of God to the rise of clown pants. There are more than 300 episodes to listen to, which should easily ensure you have plenty of interesting facts to sprinkle into any conversation. Stuff You Missed in History Class In this podcast, hosts Holly Frey and Tracy V. Wilson teach you all the stuff you missed in history class — whether you simply weren't paying attention or your teacher never covered it — and with over 1,500 episodes available, it's going to take you some time to get up to speed. Topics covered range from the history of Halloween candy to the beginnings of Walt Whitman's poetry career, taking in some extremely weird stories along the way. American History Tellers If you're knowledgeable about world history but your American history is a little rusty, American History Tellers is the podcast you need to listen to. Host Lindsay Gammie fills you in on the stories that made America, diving deep into the events, times, and people that shaped our nation, with episodes covering everything from Prohibition and the Gold Rush to the Space Race. Tune in every week for a new 40-minute episode and you'll soon be the American history expert among your friends. If you enjoy this, you'll want to check out Tides of History, also from The Wondery. Nice Try! There may be only 10 episodes of Nice Try!, but we wish there were more. You may recognize host Avery Trufelman's engaging yet soothing voice from her design podcast 99% Invisible. Only this time she's talking about people who tried to design a better world — a utopia — throughout history, and how their best-laid plans didn't always work out. From the true story of Jamestown to New York's Oneida Community, each episode takes a closer look at humanity's attempts to construct the perfect society, and the often disastrous outcomes. Revolutions This sweeping podcast covers various revolutions that have occurred around the world. It starts with King Charles and the English civil wars of the 17th century, and then goes on to cover the complex French, American, and Russian revolutions, and more. Mike Duncan mixes some anecdotes and interesting facts into his research and has a gentle narration style that makes for easy listening. If you enjoy this, then you'll also want to seek out Duncan's earlier podcast series, The History of Rome. The Memory Palace With a focus on interesting nuggets of American history, you'll be hard-pressed to find a more professionally produced historical podcast. The supremely talented Nate DiMeo weaves together soundscapes with engagingly concise narration to tell a wide range of intriguing tales from the past. These elegantly constructed historical snapshots are usually around 10 minutes long, sometimes longer, sometimes shorter; they can be humorous or tragic, but they're always enthralling in one of the best podcasts about history. Something True If you love the bizarre forgotten tales of history, then this witty, sardonic podcast series should delight you. Duncan Fife researches and writes entertaining scripts, while Alex Ashby recites them with dramatic flair. Each episode explores a single story, starting with U.S. president, Warren G. Harding's famous dog and ending with a monstrous Victorian pie. The episodes are short, at between 10 and 15 minutes, and there aren't enough of them. Dan Carlin's Hardcore History If you find historians a bit too dry, then you might want to give this podcast a try. Thanks to its accessible nature, entertaining style, and the enthusiasm of the host, it's one of the most successful history podcasts around. Carlin covers all sorts of topics, does a fair bit of research, and stirs up some interesting arguments. If you're looking for a deep dive into topics over several hours, then Carlin's series should please you. He's a very entertaining storyteller. Witness History Served up in easily digestible 10-minute chunks, this BBC podcast series brings us voices from the past, as people who were actually present at various major historical events talk about their experiences. It offers unique, first-hand insight into everything from submarine warfare in the First World War to the invention of the iPhone. Lore With the tagline "Sometimes truth is more frightening than fiction" this podcast transforms the darker corners of history into engaging, creepy campfire tales. Hosted by author Aaron Mahnke, the meticulously researched show mines folklore, superstition, and urban legends to uncover the roots of supernatural history and find the real-life inspirations. Amazon has turned this podcast into a TV show which fans of the podcast are sure to love. A History of the World in 100 Objects This 100-part BBC series was narrated by the erudite Neil MacGregor when he was director of the British Museum and it focuses on a single object in each episode. The objects span two million years of human history, from an ancient Egyptian mummy to a Chinese bronze bell to pieces of eight, all the way through to a solar-powered lamp and charger. There's an accompanying book too, available on Amazon. Revisionist History Master storyteller Malcolm Gladwell revisits events, people, and ideas from modern history that he feels "deserve a second chance." He draws on a wide range of source material, including audio files and documents, and the opinions of experts and journalists, to weave together a fresh perspective on an eclectic mix of topics that range from secret Pentagon projects to Toyota's self-accelerating car scandal. This isn't objective analysis; Gladwell always puts his opinion across, but whether you agree with him or not, the stories are beautifully told. Medieval Death Trip If you ever study history and feast your eyes on primary sources, then you'll know that many of them reveal fascinating insights about the times in which they were written. Contrary to popular belief, they're not always dry, but can be witty, illuminating, and downright weird. Patrick Lane combines portions of source material with historical interpretations to pick out interesting characters and events from medieval times and explore them in an enjoyable, rambling manner. Dan Snow's History Hit You'll find explorations of all sorts of historical topics in this podcast and fascinating interviews with a laundry list of expert historians. Dan Snow is enthusiastic and elicits a lot of insight from his guests. This podcast tackles the span of history from ancient times through to modern breaking news events; each episode is packed with information, and it often poses interesting questions and then attempts to answer them.
