Anyone familiar with Walgreens know if they'll hire 16 year olds as pharmacy techs as long as state laws allow it? I am almost positive that they do, but I want to make sure. My state does not require you to be 16 to register, so I am wondering if there is some sort of company rule. Thanks! It probably depends on the state, but I'm pretty sure that in New York you have to be 18 to work as a tech. I am aware of the state requirements... I am asking about the company requirements. I am almost positive that you can work as a tech at 16. On their website, it says: "In most states, Pharmacy Technicians must be at least 18 years old," which leads me to believe that it is on a state-by-state basis and that there is no company age requirement. I am hoping that someone who works for the company or who is knowledgeable about this will respond. Walgreens requires a high school diploma or a GED of its techs. I am not sure about the age requirement. What about those working towards a high school diploma? Also, are you sure that this is not because of requirements in your state that Walgreens must follow? I looked it up, and according to the NJ BOP (assuming that's the state you are in), the state requires that you have a high school diploma or GED, as well as being 18 years of age. Last edited: Jan 22, 2009 You must be 18 to be hired on as a technician. This is not to say that there are no 17 or 16 year olds working at Walgreens in the pharmacy but it is against store policy. Walgreens codes every position including pharmacy technician, photo technician, and manager. All these positions will not allow you to code a person if they are under the age of 18. I was going to say this myself... Last edited: Jan 24, 2009 Even if its legal to work under 18 why would they want that? Why pick someone without a high school diploma when they can pick people with one? Good point. In my experience, I've become aware that one must possess a high school diploma/GED in order to work as a CPHT. Sorry, paspie. Unfortunately Walgreens does not allow anyone under the age of 18 to step foot into the pharmacy regardless of state law. I had to start there at the front register for that reason myself. Once I turned 18 they changed my position to pharmacy technician. While there aren't many retail stores that hire employees under 18, there are some major chains that hire teenagers. From clothing stores to food service locations, stores like Forever 21, Gap, JCPenney, Kroger, Panera Bread, and more hire teens to work in-store. Some clothing stores also hire models for their brand, primarily through modeling agencies like Future Faces NYC and Next Model Management. Labor Laws for Minors When looking for a job as a teenager, keep in mind that most states typically require minors to obtain a work permit with the help of a legal parent/guardian. The Department of Labor lists the states that require minors to have a work permit and/or an age certificate. Also, most stores only have a few slots open for younger employees – partially because minors can only work limited hours – while other stores only hire teens as seasonal employees. Note. Retail jobs for minors typically pay minimum wage. The current minimum hourly wage as set by the Department of Labor is $7.25.[1] However, employers may pay employees under age 20 a minimum hourly wage of $4.25 for the first 90 days of employment or until the employee reaches age 20, whichever comes first.[2] Comparison Table You can use the table below for a quick comparison of the stores that hire teenagers and the minimum age for employment. Select any store or scroll for more details. The List Below, we list the retail establishments that hire minors – most set the hiring age at 16, but some hire teens as young as 14. We've categorized the list below by store type: clothing and department stores, grocery and convenience stores, and food service. Even if the application doesn't ask for one, it might be a good idea to write one. A resume will help you make a good impression, and you'll be able to use it as a starting point as you gain more work experience. Consider looking at a tutorial the first time you put together a resume. Practice filling out a job application. You'll want to make sure that your job application is filled out completely and accurately. If it's your first time applying for a job, it never hurts to practice filling out a few job applications until you feel satisfied with your answers. Before turning your application in, be sure there aren't any grammatical or spelling errors. Make sure you have the proper paperwork. Most states require minors to obtain a work permit and/or an age certificate. As noted above, the U.S. Department of Labor lists which states require minors to have a work permit and/or an age certificate. Gather references. A retail job will typically ask you to provide two to four references. You'll want your references to come from people who know you well but aren't your parents or immediate family. Teachers, coaches, mentors, or any other adult in your life for whom you've done some odd jobs are the best people to ask. Practice your interview skills. If you can, get your parents or another adult to help you with a mock interview. Practice answering interview questions until you feel confident enough to go through with the real thing. Dress the part. The way you look during an interview is just as important as how well you answer the interviewer's questions. You don't have to wear formal attire, but you should look clean and put together. The interview may be the one time you'll want to ask your parents for help picking out an outfit. Follow up on your application. Unless a company explicitly tells you not to ask about your application after you submit it, you should follow up on the status of your application. Be sure to wait at least a week before doing a follow-up to avoid being perceived as annoying. You'll also want to follow up after interviews after you land one. Be prepared for rejection. Unfortunately, rejections are a normal part of the job-hunting process. Keep in mind that you're likely not the only one going after the job, and there are times when someone else is simply a better match for the position. Accept the job offer and work hard. If you stick with it, you should get at least one job offer. After you've made sure you actually want the job, you can accept the offer and make a plan to be the best worker you can be. Do your best to commit to the job after you've accepted it, as this will now become a part of your resume. Modeling Agencies That Hire Kids and Teens Since several of the companies that hire teenagers only use modeling agencies to hire models, if you're looking for a modeling gig, you may want to contact one of the following top modeling agencies that represent teens, children, and babies: For more options, see our list of jobs that allow colored hair, dreadlocks, etc. Skip to main content Reddit and its partners use cookies and similar technologies to provide you with a better experience. You can work in some drugstores as a pharmacy tech intern or trainee. While some stores prefer a high school degree, many retail outlets will also hire technician trainees that are young as 17. However, inexperience and youth cause some prejudices to develop among pharmacy customers. Therefore, you need to be highly detail-oriented and mature to take on the role at a young age. The topics covered in this post primarily cover obtaining training and employment as a pharmacy technician. Therefore, the article reviews the following subjects:Stores that Hire Pharmacy Tech TraineesJob Prospects in the Pharmacy FieldPharmacy Tech SalariesPharmacy ErrorsBasic Pharmacy Tech SkillsPharmacy Tech ProgramsPharmacy Tech Certification and RecertificationStores that Hire Pharmacy Tech TraineesStores such as Walgreens and CVS currently hire candidates as young as 17 years old to work in the pharmacy. In addition, a number of vocational colleges and high schools offer job training programs that work with these pharmacy chains. As a result, the programs permit young people to hold part-time pharmacy jobs, giving them the opportunity to shadow the store's pharmacist and learn more about the job of technician.Major Topics Covered in Store Training ProgramsTraining programs that are offered by such drugstores as CVS or Walgreens typically cover the following highlighted topics:Maintaining a professional rapport with patients or pharmacy clients who come into the retail storeLearning to cashier and how to apply good customer service skillsNotifying patients of changes in prescriptionsGetting an education about the various kinds of medicinesLearning how to dispense medicinesLearning about the various drug interactionsLearning how insurance works for prescriptions and the proper billing proceduresKnowing how to counsel patients about medicinesJob Prospects in the Pharmacy FieldGood Job Prospects for TechniciansSo, most high school students who work in a pharmacy are working as an intern or cashier. However, as noted, some local pharmacies, such as CVS or Walgreens, train teens to become the actual technician. Because more drugstore chains are depending on pharmacy technicians to fill their prescriptions, you have a good chance of finding a job in the field. Today, it is cheaper to hire and pay a technician to fill prescriptions than it is to hire and pay a pharmacist. In fact, if you eventually plan to be a pharmacist, be advised that, currently, there are more pharmacy graduates than pharmacist jobs. So, getting employed as a technician is an easier role to obtain – at least at the present time.Pharmacy Tech SalariesAccording to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, a pharmacy technician makes about $13 per hour, on average, in retail establishments. If you work in a hospital pharmacy, you will usually average about $16.00 per hour.Pharmacy ErrorsWith that being said, there are some notable risks associated with pharmaceutical inexperience. While a pharmacy usually has double and triple-check processes in place, a pharmacist may not always catch an error that his or her technician may have made. Unfortunately, these kinds of mistakes can be serious when caused as the result of inexperience, lack of skills, or immaturity.Types of ErrorsErrors can be made due to the following:Dispensing the incorrect medicationCalculating an incorrect dosageDistributing the incorrect medical equipmentGiving incorrect advice to a patient or customerSo, if you want to work as a technician, you need to have excellent pharmacy math skills. That means you have to enjoy subjects such as algebra or chemistry. If you have problems understanding the subject matter of these types of subjects, then you need to hone your skills so you have a complete understanding of how to calculate and dispense medicines.Older customers sometimes are leery when they are served by a teen in a pharmacy. So, you also need to be aware of this reality if you plan to apply at your local drug store as an intern in the pharmacy.An Example of One Serious Technician ErrorOnce case in point about the seriousness of making an error was reported on ABC News. A Florida appeals court upheld a judgment against the pharmacy retailer Walgreen for a $25.8 million judgment. The error of a teen pharmacy technician led to a patient receiving blood thinner pills in an amount that was ten times greater than what had been prescribed. This case underscored the use of pharmacy technicians who have not yet graduated from high school. During court testimony, the technician stated she typed ten milligrams on a patient's prescription instead of the required dose of one milligram.Basic Pharmacy Tech SkillsTherefore, you can work in a pharmacy, even if you are as young as 17 years of age. However, you also need to understand that this type of role carries an important responsibility with respect to patient safety. Again, it is important that you have an excellent understanding of pharmacy math and that you also have superior communication skills. You also need to be interested in learning about the various medicines and how they are used. Overall, you need to be devoted and detail-minded in order to assume this type of role at a young age.Pharmacy Tech ProgramsSometimes it is best to apply to an online certificate program before you apply at a drug store. Pharmacy technician programs usually are comprised of 600 hours of instruction as well as a 200-hour externship over ten months. Associates degrees programs are also available that take two years to complete.A Basic Overview of the Course HighlightsA program covers the following areas:Pharmacy lawPharmacy ethicsHealthcare systemsMedical terminologyAnatomyPharmacologyPhysiologyPharmaceutical calculationsPharmacy Tech Certification and RecertificationTechnicians are certified by Pharmacy Technician Certification Board or the National Healthcare Association. The PTCB requires that applicants pass exam while the NHA requires one year of experience. Both associations require that applicants have a high-school education.Specialized Certification TrainingsAs indicated above, retail chains also offer specialized training so participants can work as general pharmacy technicians.Recertification RequirementsOnce established and working, pharmacy technicians need to take 20 hours of continuing education in order to test for recertification. Pharmacy techs need to be recertified every two years.Do you believe you have what it takes to work in a pharmacy? Do you think it is better to receive training from a school before applying to a local pharmacy? Would you rather go through the training offered by a retail pharmacy? Keep in mind that obtaining an education opens up more opportunities, especially if you want to work in a hospital pharmacy. But, there are some common questions that they do often ask. At a Walgreens interview, you will most likely talk with a manager. You will also take a skill-assessment test and fill out a computer questionnaire. Also, be prepared to take a pre-employment drug screen.Here are some questions that they have been known to ask during interviews.Can you work strange hours?Why are they asking? Many Walgreens locations are open 24 hours, and this means you could be facing overnight shifts, split shifts, and early morning shifts. They need to know that you are available to take shifts and will be okay with working weird hours.What's the ideal answer?The interviewer wants to hear that you are flexible with your schedule and can work outside of traditional working hours. However, if there are limits to your schedule, be honest about it. It won't do you any good to lie about your availability.Tell me about a time when you had to deal with a difficult customer and what was the outcome?Why are they asking? When it comes to life in customer service, you will come across your share of upset or difficult customers. If you have prior work experience, they might ask you this question to see how you dealt with the situation because it does come up, and you need to handle it in the best way possible.What's the ideal answer?If you don't have any experiences with difficult customers, that's okay. If you have, tell them the story (if you handled it well, and it had a positive outcome). If the situation ended up with you screaming and yelling or getting fired, that's not a story you want to share.They want to hear that you did your best to make the difficult customer happy. Or, if you couldn't fix the problem, you grabbed a manager and had them help you.They should we hire you?Why are they asking? If a manager asks you this question, they are trying to get you to sell yourself. Part of your job at Walgreens is giving exceptional customer service, and if you can sell yourself, you can sell their products and promotions. They are wanting to find out how well you can communicate, while being positive and professional.What's the ideal answer?Know your strengths. If you get asked this question, tell them how you will benefit their business. They want to hear that you have above average verbal communication skills, have a friendly and upbeat demeanor, and can successfully sign up new members to their Balance rewards program.Tell them that you are a reliable worker who will show up to work on time for every scheduled shift.
